This technology will be available via FIFA Ultimate Team and real-life tactics available to fans during the lead-up to the FIFA World Cup™ starting in June this year. Real-life tactics are available in a section of FIFA Ultimate Team called The Manager. The Manager will run alongside a new FIFA Managers Career Mode. “We are doing our best to challenge the needs of the fan, the player, and the coach,” said David Rutter, Creative Director, EA SPORTS FIFA. “We’re not only asking how players can improve on their skills, but also how they can get better at their jobs. The goal is to put all of this technology within a beautifully crafted game experience.” “We were blown away by what The Manager’s in-game tutorial taught us about FIFA real-life tactics,” said Eric Merrifield, Senior Producer on Fifa 22 Activation Code. “As part of our strategy to push fans closer to the pitch, we’ve now incorporated a tutorial into the Manager which we think will be particularly popular.” In FIFA Ultimate Team: The Manager, fans can use a new tutorial to learn how to set their player’s starting position (how to build your initial tactics), how to manage your tactics (how to replenish your squad with new players), and how to trade your squad members. As part of the tutorial, players can showcase their skills by taking on virtual or actual opponents. Players will have the ability to manage attributes such as speed, passing, shooting, strength, heading, agility and dribbling. The Manager is inspired by real-world players and coaches, who are not only some of the best soccer players in the world, but are also managers and coaches that inspire all of us to be better. “The way that managers think about tactics on the pitch can be so much different than what we get in FIFA from a game standpoint,” said Julian Gollop, Creative Director on FIFA 22. “We are trying to find ways to bring that to life.” “We want to push the limits on what a player can do,” said Merrifield. “Previously, players could only choose to play out one style of play, but now, as we’ve seen with the FIFA 18 Superstar cards, players can customize their style of play.📌”
