I'm using SQL Azure as an Azure Search backend and indexing data from a few "recordsets" that follow the same schema. Example: [{recordset 1}, {recordset 2}] the table is something like: CREATE TABLE [stuff].[group_vod] ([group_id] INT NOT NULL PRIMARY KEY, [group_name] VARCHAR(100) NOT NULL) so I'd need to use a custom search API to turn name]/docs/[collection name]/fields/[document property name] into: name]/docs/[collection name]/fields/[recordset 1.] name]/docs/[collection name]/fields/[recordset 2.] Is this possible? I'm using Python for the custom search API and I've looked into the DocumentBuilder class but haven't found a way to set the schema name. A: Based on the current documentation, the Indexing Service does not currently have a method to specify a field's schema. This means that you cannot use the schema name, but you can specify the field name(s) you are querying. If you want to get all recordset1 fields, for example, then your query should be: More information about query parameters: https
