Recently released emails obtained by The Daily Beast show that agents from the FBI's Foreign Counterintelligence Section (FCS) claim to have provided assistance to U.S. intelligence agencies in the hunt for Russian hackers attempting to disrupt U.S. elections. The emails, some of which were published by WikiLeaks in August, appear to show FBI agents helping intelligence authorities track Russian government hackers who accessed computers to release embarrassing email purloined from the Democratic National Committee and Hillary Clinton campaign chair John Podesta. But the FBI's foreign counterintelligence section (known as "FCS" or "Counterintelligence Division" in emails) is not the FBI's domestic counterintelligence section. According to an August report from The New York Times, the FBI's number one priority was the election integrity effort, and the FBI spent more time on its cyber efforts than is typical. The FBI was also more aggressively targeting Russian attempts to influence the election—especially in the latter half of 2016. However, sources familiar with the extent of FBI's efforts say that the FBI is effectively in charge of the investigations, including an effort to identify hackers believed to be Russian agents working to disseminate files stolen from U.S. officials. The FBI has also been the lead agency working with the Department of Homeland Security to secure voting machines in potential hot spots. The FBI's work actually began in 2014, at the height of the initial stage of the Russian government
