Wilms tumor is an embryonal tumor of the kidney. Before the advent of chemotherapy the Wilms tumor was treated primarily by surgery and radiotherapy. Twenty-nine patients (median age 3.8 years) with Wilms tumor who were treated according to the National Wilms tumor Study protocol between 1960 and 1989 have been retrospectively reviewed to evaluate the frequency and potential consequences of radiotherapy. The tumor was in a local stage in 11 patients and in a distant stage in 18 patients. The median total dose of radiotherapy was 2400 cGy. Median time of radiotherapy was 15.5 months (0.9-166 months). Among 16 patients who had more than 25 years of follow-up, only one developed a secondary cancer; this patient was irradiated at age 1 year and had Hodgkin's disease develop at age 26 years. The long term follow-up of this patient with Wilms tumor suggests that the risk of developing a second cancer in irradiated patients with Wilms tumor is low.
